

RECORD sales were down in 2007 but it proved a vintage year for the music DVD. A certain Ms Winehouse aside, the best ones invited us to wallow in nostalgia

1. BOB DYLAN: The Other Side Of The Mirror - Live At The Newport Folk Festival 1963-65. Stunning footage of the transformation of Dylan, below, from "voice of a generation" folksinger to plugged-in rocker singing surreal lyrics.

2. NIRVANA: Unplugged In New York. Kurt Cobain ended his life a few months later but his acoustic performance in New York was painful, gripping, beautiful. Available on DVD for the first time.

3. THE WHO: Amazing Journey. A thrilling ride with a Great British institution. Great concert clips stretching back to 1964 and insightful interviews with Townshend, Daltrey and the mums of Moon and Entwistle.

4. THE BEATLES: Help! The Beatles followed Elvis into the movie business and their second effort was an engaging if madcap spy spoof. Plenty of hits and plenty of extras.

5. ROXY MUSIC: The Thrill Of it All - A Visual History 1972-82. The expression "art rock" was made for Roxy... the glamour girls, the outlandish clothes and the exotic, original sound.

6. DAVID GILMOUR: Remember That Night - Live At The Royal Albert Hall. The Pink Floyd guitarist in all his pomp at one of Britain's greatest music venues. A good mix of solo and Floyd material.

7. THE RAMONES: It's Alive

1974-1996. The New York punks lived fast, played faster and died young. This comprehensive overview captures them in all their raging glory.

8. AMY WINEHOUSE: I Told You I Was Trouble. Concert and documentary film that proves Amy to be our greatest living vocalist... despite all the trouble she gets into!

9. LED ZEPPELIN: The Song Remains The Same (Special Edition). Overblown? Self-indulgent? Of course it was but it's also clear from their epic 1976 performances what all the current fuss is about. They don't make rock gods like them any more.

10. JOE STRUMMER: The Future Is Unwritten. Julien Temple's affectionate account of the life of his pal, the late great Clash singer and guitarist.
